Corps, public safety agencies to hold emergency response drill

Clarkston, Wash., – Community emergency response and public safety agencies, along with the local office of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers will conduct an emergency response drill here March 20.

The exercise will include participants from the Clarkston police and fire departments, Asotin County Sheriff's office, the Washington State Patrol, and the Eastern Project office of the Corps' Walla Walla District. Planners say the drill will start around 8 a.m. and run for about two hours. Participants will practice responding to the discovery of an apparently abandoned container of potentially hazardous material found on Corps property along the Snake River.
